The Continental Congress Kept Secret Journals

When we think about the founding of America, we often picture dramatic moments like the signing of the Declaration of Independence or George Washington crossing the Delaware. But some of the most crucial work was quite hush hush—in shadows and secrecy. My favorite discovered tidbit of hidden history? The Continental Congress maintained not one, but two sets of official records during the Revolutionary War. The public journals for the Crown told one story. The "Secret Journals" told another entirely. The complete Secret Journals are available online.

CHARLES THOMSON: AMERICA'S KEEPER OF SECRETS

Charles Thomson served as the only Secretary of the Continental Congress for its entire fifteen-year existence, from 1774 to 1789. While delegates came and went, Thomson remained the constant presence, faithfully recording debates and decisions that would shape the infant nation. His name was regarded as an emblem of truth, and in all the factional disputes of the Revolutionary period, his judgment was respected.

Portrait of Thomson by Joseph Whigh

But Thomson held a responsibility that went far beyond typical record-keeping. He was trusted to decide which minutes of their meetings and decisions were recorded in the Secret Journal. This wasn't just administrative discretion—it was a matter of life and death during wartime.

WHY TWO SETS OF BOOKS?

The Continental Congress faced an impossible situation. As rebels fighting against the British Crown, they were technically committing treason with every decision they made. Yet they also needed to govern, conduct diplomacy, and coordinate military efforts. The Continental Congress, recognizing the need for secrecy regarding foreign intelligence, foreign alliances, and military matters, maintained "Secret Journals," apart from its public journals, to record its decisions in such matters.

And yes—they actually called them the "Secret Journals." Not the "Confidential Records" or "Classified Documents" or some other euphemistic title. Just the Secret Journals. The straightforward name tells us everything about the founders' mindset: they knew they were doing dangerous work, and they weren't going to pretend otherwise.

The public journals served multiple purposes. They kept colonists informed about congressional actions and demonstrated legitimacy to both supporters and skeptics. But they were also sent to Britain as required communications from what the Crown still considered its colonial assemblies.

The Secret Journals, however, contained the real business of revolution. Congress recorded all decisions regarding the Committee of Secret Correspondence in "Secret Journals", separate from the public journals used to record decisions concerning other matters. These confidential records documented intelligence operations, foreign negotiations, covert supply chains, and military strategies that would have meant execution for anyone involved if discovered by British forces.

WHAT THE CONTINENTAL CONGRESS SECRET JOURNALS CONTAINED

November 9th, 1775 United Colonies Continental Congress Pledge of Secrecy—Historic.us Collection

The scope of activities hidden in these journals was remarkable. The committee employed secret agents abroad, conducted covert operations, devised codes and ciphers, funded propaganda activities, authorized the opening of private mail, acquired foreign publications for analysis, established courier systems, and developed maritime capabilities apart from the Continental Navy.

The Secret Journals covered the period from 1775-1788 and included sensitive intelligence operations and foreign negotiations. They documented everything from arms procurement in France to intelligence gathering about British troop movements. The journals also contained records of financial arrangements that couldn't be made public—payments to spies, funding for covert operations, and contracts with suppliers who needed anonymity for their own protection.

On November 9, 1775, the Continental Congress adopted its oath of secrecy, one more stringent than the oaths of secrecy it would require of others in sensitive employment. This wasn't theatrical politics—it was survival.

THE WEIGHT OF SECRETS

Thomson's role required incredible discretion and judgment. He had to determine which congressional decisions could safely appear in public records and which needed to remain hidden. After leaving office, he chose to destroy a work of over 1,000 pages that covered the political history of the American Revolution, stating his desire to avoid "contradict[ing] all the histories of the great events of the Revolution".

This destruction of records represents one of American history's great mysteries. What did Thomson know that he felt needed to remain buried? His decision to preserve the myths and legends of the Revolution rather than reveal the messy, complicated truth shows how heavy the burden of these secrets became.

The Secret Journals weren't published until 1821, more than thirty years after the Continental Congress disbanded. None of the contemporary editions included the "Secret Journals" (confidential sections of the records), which were not published until 1821. By then, most of the original participants were dead, and the new nation was strong enough to handle the truth about its covert beginnings.

WHEN SECRETS FINALLY CAME TO LIGHT

For decades after the Revolution, the Secret Journals remained exactly that—secret. The Continental Congress disbanded in 1789, but the confidential records stayed locked away. It wasn't until 1821, more than thirty years later, that these hidden chapters of American history were finally published by Thomas B. Wait in Boston under the official title "Secret Journals of the Acts and Proceedings of Congress, From the First Meeting Thereof to the Dissolution of the Confederation."

The timing wasn't accidental. By 1821, most of the original participants were dead, and the United States was strong enough to handle revelations about its covert beginnings. The published Secret Journals revealed a four-volume treasure trove of intelligence operations, foreign negotiations, and military strategies that had been hidden from British eyes during the war.

Today, curious readers can explore these fascinating documents themselves through digital archives. The complete Secret Journals are available online, offering an unvarnished look at how the founders really operated when they thought no one would ever know.

LEGACY OF THE SECRET JOURNALS

The Secret Journals remind us that the founding of America wasn't just about grand speeches and dramatic declarations. It was also about intelligence networks, covert operations, and the countless unnamed individuals who risked everything to make independence possible. For years, Thomson's brain held the best record of what really happened in the Continental Congress.

These hidden records shaped American independence in ways we're still discovering today. They reveal the Continental Congress as a sophisticated operation that understood the complexities of 18th-century geopolitics. The founders weren't just idealistic rebels—they were strategic thinkers who built an intelligence apparatus that helped secure victory against the world's most powerful empire.

The next time you read about the Revolutionary War—be it fiction or non-fiction—remember that for every public resolution passed by the Continental Congress, there may have been secret decisions recorded in Thomson's careful handwriting. Some of those secrets changed the course of history. Others remain buried forever—not even making it into the journals.

Twenty-eight Years and Still Counting

What an achievement! Tom Whitelock (right), a friend to many and a fellow compatriot, was honored on Saturday, September 13, 2025, at the Dallas Chapter SAR meeting for his 28 yrs and 8 months of perfect attendance. That is 332 consecutive chapter meetings! President Ron Turner attended the meeting to help Tom celebrate his unbelievable achievement. Dallas Chapter President Brent Harshman (left) presided over the meeting and presented Tom with a certificate recognizing his unmatched attendance record. Past District Vice President and Past Dallas Chapter President Tom Van Fossen presided over the "roasting" of Compatriot Whitelock.

The Star-Spangled Banner

Chaplain Ralph Smith provided an lively program on “The Star-Spangled Banner” at the September chapter meeting. He spoke about what Francis Scott Key observed and the resulting poem that eventually became our national anthem.

Ralph emphasized the importance and relativity to us today of the first and the fourth stanzas. If you have never read the entire poem, you are encouraged to do so, paying particular attention to the wording of the first and fourth stanzas.

This is the complete version of “The Star-Spangled Banner,” showing spelling and punctuation from Francis Scott Key’s manuscript in the Maryland Historical Society collection.

O say can you see, by the dawn’s early light,
What so proudly we hail’d at the twilight’s last gleaming,
Whose broad stripes and bright stars through the perilous fight
O’er the ramparts we watch’d were so gallantly streaming?
And the rocket’s red glare, the bomb bursting in air,
Gave proof through the night that our flag was still there,
O say does the star-spangled banner yet wave
O’er the land of the free and the home of the brave?

On the shore dimly seen through the mists of the deep
Where the foe’s haughty host in dread silence reposes,
What is that which the breeze, o’er the towering steep,
As it fitfully blows, half conceals, half discloses?
Now it catches the gleam of the morning’s first beam,
In full glory reflected now shines in the stream,
’Tis the star-spangled banner—O long may it wave
O’er the land of the free and the home of the brave!

And where is that band—who so vauntingly swore,
That the havoc of war and the battle’s confusion
A home and a Country should leave us no more?
Their blood has wash’d out their foul footsteps’ pollution
No refuge could save the hireling and slave
From the terror of flight or the gloom of the grave,
And the star-spangled banner in triumph doth wave
O’er the land of the free and the home of the brave.

O thus be it ever when freemen shall stand
Between their lov’d home and the war’s desolation!
Blest with vict’ry and peace may the heav’n rescued land
Praise the power that hath made and preserv’d us a nation!
Then conquer we must, when our cause it is just,
And this be our mott—“In God is our trust.”
And the star-spangled banner in triumph shall wave
O’er the land of the free and the home of the brave.

Re-design of Newsletter In Work

Newsletter editor Ron Turner is working on a new design (or layout) of the chapter newsletter that will appear with the January 2026 edition. Why? Ron has used MS Publisher for many years both professionally and personally. However, Microsoft has announced that Publisher will no longer be supported beginning in October 2026. Publisher files as of that date will no longer be available—won’t even be able to open them unless they are converted first to PDF and then to MS Word. In anticipation of the change, Ron plans to begin using MS Word in 2026 for all chapter documents. Unfortunately, Word does not have the layout ease that Publisher has so you can expect some major changes as to how you see content laid out in the new version.

THE AMERICAN'S CREED

I believe in the United States of America as a government of the people, by the people, for the people, whose just powers are derived from the consent of the governed, a democracy in a republic, a sovereign Nation of many sovereign States, a perfect union, one and inseparable, established upon those principles of freedom, equality, justice, and humanity for which American patriots sacrificed their lives and fortunes.
