early in the revolt, Continental Congress changed this in June 1775 by creating a new flag, one with thirteen stripes, alternating red and white stripes, and the Union Jack in the upper corner. When George Washington saw the flag, he realized this was and problem so on June 14, 1777, the Continental Congress officially adopted the Stars and Stripes as the US Flag. Over one hundred years later in 1916 President Woodrow Wilson established June 14 as Flag Day.

The Declaration

248 years ago, on June, 11, 1775, the Continental Congress appointed 5 men to lead the way in declaring independence of the 13 colonies that later became The United States.

The 5 men were Thomas Jefferson, John Adams, Benjamin Franklin, Roger Sherman, and Robert R Livingston. Together, they drafted one of the most significant documents in the course of our great nation's history. The 56 delegates who signed the Declaration of Independence came to be known as the nation's Founding Fathers, and the Declaration has become one of the most circulated, reprinted, and influential documents in world history.

Larry G. Stevens Editor.

Thomas Jefferson submitted their document of declaration on July 2, 1776, and after some revisions, not liked by Jefferson, Continental Congress approved and began signing the Declaration of Independence.

Strong language expressing discontent to an oppressive ruler was the following and most quoted, “We hold these Truths to be self-evident that all Men are created equal, that they are endowed, by their Creator, with certain unalienable Rights, that among these are Life, Liberty, and the Pursuit of Happiness “, is probably the most misunderstood statement in the declaration and has received multiple opinions by historians taking the penners words out of context of the times, colonial times, and unequal treatment as citizens of Britain.

Colonialist had no advocates in British Parliament like citizens in Britain and with no representatives in the House of Commons or Lords, they felt they had no say in their affairs. Their only avenue of correspondence was through Crown appointed Royal Governors who in nearly each case in the 13 colonies had no concerns for the opinions of colonial citizens. Representatives sent to London such as Benjamin Franklin were largely ignored.

Thomas Jefferson to Henry Lee, May 8, 1825, just two weeks before his death, “but with respect to our rights and the acts of the British government contravening those rights, there was but one opinion on this side of the water. all American whigs thought alike on these subjects. when forced therefore to resort to arms for redress, an appeal to the tribunal of the world was deemed proper for our justification. this was the object of the Declaration of Independence. not to find out new principles, or new arguments, never before thought of, not merely to say things which had never been said before; but to place before mankind the common sense of the subject; [ . . . ] terms so plain and firm, as to command their assent, and to justify ourselves in the independant stand we [ . . . ] compelled to take. neither aiming at originality of principle or sentiment, nor yet copied from any particular and previous writing, it was intended to be an expression of the american mind, and to give to that expression the proper tone and spirit called for by the occasion. all it’s authority rests then on the harmonising sentiments of the day, whether expressed, in conversns in letters, printed essays or in the elementary books of public right, as Aristotle, Cicero, Locke, Sidney E’c. the historical documents which you mention as in your possession, ought all to be found, and I am persuaded you will find, to be corroborative of the facts and principles advanced in that Declaration. be pleased to accept assurances of my great respect and esteem.”

Three of the five men of the Declaration Committee are well known; Benjamin Franklin who was probably the best ambassador and foreign diplomat our country ever had, John Adams from the Boston Massacre to President of the United States, and Thomas Jefferson, who wrote the Declaration, statesman, and President.

The fourth and fifth committee members are less well known.

Robert Livingston, born November 27, 1746, died February 26, 1813, was an American lawyer, politician, and diplomat from New York, was as a Founding Father of the United States. He was known as “The Chancellor” after the high New York state legal office he held for twenty-five years. He was a member of the Committee of Five that drafted the Declaration of Independence, but he was recalled by the state of New York before he could sign the final document. Robert Livingston administered the Oath of Office to George Washington when he became the first President of the United States on April 30, 1789.

The fifth was Roger Sherman, who was born on April 19, 1721 and died July 23, 1793. Sherman was a lawyer with a career in Litchfield County, Connecticut, despite not having a formal education. He was a member of the Connecticut House of Representatives, and then served as a justice in the Connecticut Superior Court. He represented Connecticut at the Continental Congress and was a member of the Committee of Five helping draft the Declaration of Independence.

Roger Sherman was the only person to sign all four of our great state papers: the Continental Association, the Declaration of Independence, the Articles of Confederation, and the Constitution of the United States. When Sherman served as a delegate to the 1787 Philadelphia Convention that produced the Constitution, only Benjamin Franklin was older.
